

Environmental Sciences Colloquium

Fall 2006: Invasive Species

Time: Friday 12:20-1:10 PM

Location: 135 Emerson Hall

- September 15 Invasive Species: Don't worry, Be happy! Really?
Antonio DiTomasso, Cornell University, Dept. of Crop & Soil Science
- September 22 Invasive species: A look at The Nature Conservancy's strategies and projects
Gregg Sargis, The Nature Conservancy
- September 29 The role of native and introduced plant species in structuring amphibian communities
Bernd Blossey, Cornell University, Dept. of Natural Resources
- October 6 Environmental and economic costs of invasive species
David Pimentel, Cornell University, Dept. of Entomology
- October 20 New York's invasives: Politics and public perception
Fred LeBrun, Albany Times Union, Albany, NY
- October 27 Chasing ecological change in the Great Lakes: The role of biological invasions
Edward Mills, Cornell University, Dept. of Natural Resources, Shackleton Point
- November 3 Education and invasive species
Helen Domske, New York Sea Grant, Buffalo, NY
- November 10 The New York State Invasive Species Task Force
Steven Jay Sanford, NYS Department of Environmental Conservation, Albany, NY
- November 17 Challenges of control in densely populated areas
Ann Hajek, Cornell University, Dept. of Entomology

The Environmental Sciences Colloquium is part of the curriculum of the CALS major Science of Natural and Environmental Systems (SNES), but is open to the entire Cornell community and the public.

Organization: Susan Riha, Johannes Lehmann

For more information: <http://snes.eas.cornell.edu/>, e-mail: sw38@cornell.edu, or phone: 607.255.1269